ADVERTISING a billiards competition at a city hotel was a large sign offering a "$100 prise" (sic) each week. BYO crowbar, presumably.

IT was only a matter of time . . . from Peter Lloyd in Kurnell comes the first of the expected Prince Charles assassination-attempt jokes. Why was Prince Charles dropped from the British Olympic athletics team? Every time they fired the starter's gun he just stood there fiddling with his cufflinks. OK, so it's not great, but it's only the first one.

LAST year, BTL reported on Breda Olliffe, an Irish expatriate who had found a booming business with Irish-themed baskets for delivery, including all the tastes from the Emerald Isle. Deciding it was time to show her love for her new home as well as the old country, Breda has now opted for a new range, featuring all Australian goodies. In recognition the new basket, from her company, Aderb's in Windang, has just been awarded an Australia licence and can now carry the prestigious Made In Australia tag. Well done.

Green and gold inspiration

THE green and gold colours have served the likes of top athletes Dawn Fraser, Betty Cuthbert, Mal Meninga and Kieren Perkins. Now those colours are becoming the standard bearers for the nation's unemployed.

According to Norm Spencer, executive director of the Australian Made Campaign, when consumers buy home-grown products featuring the green and gold kangaroo logo they are not only helping our economy but creating jobs as well.

Research conducted by Queensland University's department of economics showed that every $1 million spent on Australian industry created or retained 30 jobs.

By KATHY LIPARI

This expenditure generated a further $280,000 in taxes and charges, saved $231,000 in welfare payments and produced $255,000 in purchasing power.

Mr Spencer said these figures were all the more reason for continuing the work begun by the Advance Australia Foundation and the Federal Government in 1986 with the introduction and monitoring of the Australian-made concept.

With nearly 3000 licensees now experiencing the benefits of being nationally recognised as the producers of true-blue goods and services, compared to just 600 in 1986, there's no question the campaign has been a huge success.

For the fourth year, the month of October has been earmarked as Australian Made Month.

In conjunction with high-profile companies including Coles-Myer and Pizza Hut, the campaign will once again highlight to the community the importance of buying home-grown goods.

The campaign swings into gear to-orrow with the national launch in Melbourne, then on Tuesday the attention turns to Sydney and the Gladesville Pizza Hut.

Pizza Hut, an American-owned company, will become officially involved for the first time this year.

Federal Minister for Administrative Services Frank Walker defended the decision to hold the launch on the premises of a foreign-owned organisation. The campaign was not simply about Australian-owned companies but about creating jobs.

"People may very well say 'Why go to Pizza Hut?', but it is an Australian franchise which uses Australian products and ingredients," he said.

"The key to this campaign is getting jobs for Australians."

Pizza Hut managing director Bob Steele said the company, which was also running promotions throughout October, spent $100 million a year on Australian-sourced products, and 97 per cent of toppings were made from dinky-di ingredients.

To bear the green and gold logo the major component of a product must be of Australian origin and at least 75 per cent of the cost of production incurred here.

However, there are special circumstances which may see goods being 'kangaroo certified' when their local content dips to between 50 and 70 per cent of the production costs.

PRODUCE OF AUSTRALIA

There have been calls by the Democrats recently to amend the Bill to increase local content particularly in the case of food.

But Mr Spencer believes this would only damage the campaign.

He points to research conducted by Marsden Jacob Associates this year which reveals the impact of the campaign is five to 12 times more effective than unemployment benefits.

The study showed a $1 million payment made to support the campaign has the potential to reduce the cost of unemployment benefits by $5-$12 million.

Mr Walker said the campaign would also highlight the quality of Australian products which was as good if not better than the international competition.

Buyers prefer local products

ALMOST 90 per cent of consumers prefer to buy Australian goods, according to figures released last week.

Commissioned by Coles Supermarkets as part of its commitment to the Australian Made Month campaign, the national survey showed awareness of locally produced products was at a very healthy level.

The national survey also revealed more than 70 per cent of consumers would buy Australian-made products in preference to imported goods even if the items were of the same price but the import was of better quality.

Nearly six out of every 10 people interviewed in the study by Yann Campbell Hoare Wheeler also vowed they would still buy the local product if it was 10 per cent dearer than its overseas competition.

According to Coles-Myer spokeswoman Sharyn O'Brien, the figures show shoppers are clearly aware of the importance of buying home-made goods and are willing to put their money where their mouths are.

Eighty-seven per cent of respondents surveyed in separate research in April said they had bought a product bearing the kangaroo symbol.

Recent studies have also shown that consumers have growing faith in the quality of Australian products.

Ms O'Brien said this was why Coles-Myer was continuing its involvement for the third year running in The Australian Made Month Campaign.

"People really respond to the green and gold logo which is highlighted throughout Coles stores so customers know which products are Australian-made," she said.

"We are keen to get involved in campaigns with the Advance Australia Foundation because their certification of locally produced goods provides consumers with a clearly identifiable national symbol that they can really trust."

Dear Breda,

Re: Your Participation As Our 2009 Business Client For BUSS318
Information Systems Project Management Students

I would like to thank you for agreeing to be our business client for this year's Information Systems Project Management subject. The subject is a core component of both undergraduate and postgraduate degrees in Information Systems and Technology.

Each year we select a successful business client from the Illawarra to work with our students on a weekly basis so that students may gain experience in interviewing and understanding a business client's needs, and to collaborate with them in developing a software prototype based on those requirements.

We appreciate that you have taken valuable time from running your business each week to interact with the students and to share and demonstrate your business ethics, achievements, and awards to inspire and encourage them. This is a wonderful opportunity for them and we thank you most sincerely for your involvement.

Breda's Journey Reminiscing

After a long, long journey of 28 years.

I did it My Way!

A new Journey, a new Story, an exciting journey of discovery. My love affair during my journey of 28 years was tasting, tasting & tasting. All our beautiful Gourmet Fine Foods & Wines made by our Australian Famous food Heroes from across Australia. It was just amazing, from sourcing my products, climbing trees, rocks, hills, too many to mention. When I think now I am so proud. I fell, hopped up again, tripped, broke the heels off my shoes, rings on my fingers, climbed up ladders I could go on forever.

The most precious time of my life!

I suffered a stroke in 2015 which left me very unbalanced. I started another chapter on the morning of the 10th December 2016 at 4 a.m. Suffering another stroke in my sleep leaving me completely blind in my right eye. I would really like you to know this has not changed the woman I am. I can now sit, listen and feel each moment.

I draw strength from this to share my life.

Love, life, is a Many Splendour thing.

My Inspiration to Encourage

For those who encountered heart-breaking obstacles.

Success

*The courage and confidence to begin,
the passion and perseverance to continue*

*The talent and strength to fulfil,
the road you choose to manage.*

*The meetings you make,
the paths you walk,*

the mountains you slide.

*The moments you suffer,
the example you set for others.*

Every moment is devoted, there are no limits.

The constant and determined effort that sweeps away all your "obstacles".

I hope my gift of giving will inspire many.

During my life, I have encountered many heart-breaks and have achieved many goals.

My aim always to achieve and share, I guess...this is my survival kit in life.

I started another chapter on the morning of the 10th December 2016 at 4 a.m. Suffering another stroke in my sleep leaving me completely blind in my right eye.

My Journey Continues- During the morning of the 7th July 2017 I suffered a heart attack which caused me to end up in St Vincent's Clinic Sydney. Where a week later I had a quadruple bypass. My doctors had made me believe my journey had come to an end. BUT! I woke up after my major surgery smothered with glittering stars ready to continue the next stage of my journey.

*I would really like you to know this has not changed the woman
I am. I can now sit, listen and feel each moment.*

I draw strength from this to share my life.

Love, Life, is a Many Splendour thing.
