The Plantations

This wonderful natural oil is grown amongst the best that Australian nature has to offer in a clean, green environment. There are no factories, no pollution, no hustle and bustle, just the sweet smell of the forest and tea trees. We keep our carbon footprint minimal and practice sustainable agriculture. We also protect the native animals that inhabit this distinct region, from the resident emus that live amongst the rows and rows of tea tree to the koalas that keep a watchful eye from the bordering native gum trees.

Our oil is harvested annually from fully mature trees during the months of July to September. Our dual row purpose built harvesters cut the tea trees at ground level. Once cut, the completely shredded trees are transported to our distilling plant, where the process of steam is used to extract the essential oils from the crop.

Our skilfully harvested Melaleuca Alternifolia is transported to our on site distillation plant, where the process of dry steam distillation begins.

Locked inside airtight bins, dry steam is introduced and the operation begins. As the steam passes through the leaf and the temperature inside the bins rises the steam containing the precious oils then passes through a condenser.

The steam releases the aromatic molecules from the plant because the steam forces open the pockets of oil inside the plant. The molecules of these exquisite oils then escape from the plant and evaporate into the steam. The steam now contains the essential oil and is passed through a cooling system to condense the steam. This forms a liquid from which the essential oil and water are then separated.

This mixture is then passed into a separation chamber to separate the oil from the water, resulting in NATTo's premium quality pure tea tree oil.

Ever mindful of the environment, NATTo then uses the water residue from the distillation process throughout the plantations to water the next season's crop. Once distillation is complete the waste matter from the plants is either recycled back onto the next crop of tea trees or sold as a premium grade mulch.

For thousands of years, Indigenous Australians have known the health benefits of tea tree oil using tea tree as an antiseptic for skin conditions. The leaves were crushed and applied as a paste to wounds and skin abrasions. Oils from the crushed leaves were also used to treat sore throats and coughs. Today, widely recognised as a genuine natural healer, tea tree oil is a powerful antiseptic, anti-viral and fungicidal substance. Safe for an enormous range of different cosmetic and medicinal uses, tea tree oil takes its pride of place amongst the wonderful world of essential oils and the many health benefits associated with it.

As Nature Intended

Founded in 1993 Naturally Australian Tea Tree Oil was built on a passionate commitment to the quality and authenticity of our oil.

Our tea tree plantations are located within the lush borders of the Bungawalbin National Park in northern New South Wales, Australia. We first started growing tea tree oil in this unique area because it is where the original tea tree oil, Melaleuca Alternifolia has been grown for centuries in its natural habitat.

We produce Certified Organic Tea Tree Oil and standard Tea Tree Oil. Our tea tree oil is grown in rich alluvial soil, nestled within the confines of this natural habitat which beams with native wildlife. This is what gives our oil its purity and superior quality, seldom found in other oils. By cultivating, harvesting, and distilling our oil direct on the plantation, we have the unique capability to guarantee perfection at every step of the process.

With first-hand knowledge of the incredible benefits of tea tree oil for the skin and hair, we set out to create a natural range of skin care, hair care, home care and personal care products all containing our premium oil, hence the NATTo brand was born.

Ingredients

Melaleuca Alternifolia commonly known as tea tree oil is steam distilled from the leaves, stems and bark of the plant. The benefits and potential of pure Australian tea tree oil are recognised for the natural antiseptic, anti-bacterial, anti-fungal, anti-inflammatory and anti-viral properties. Tea tree oil is a natural product for your skin and can benefit your health in so many ways.
